Developmental psychophysiology, human social and affective neuroscience, affect regulation, and the use of behavioural, brain imaging (fMRI), cortical electrophysiology (EEG/ERP), autonomic (cardiac vagal tone), hormonal, and molecular genetic techniques to understand the development of individual differences in affect processing and regulation in typical and atypical populations.